MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

SUBJECT: Federal Tort Claims Act

STAT
STAT
1. [] In early January, I met with [] and [] both of OGC. They were concerned about a possible impact of the revisions of the Federal Tort Claims Act (S. 2117) on the Agency's ability to protect the identify of employees involved in civil suits.

STAT
2. [] Currently, the Government does not assume liability for torts committed by employees overseas. In cases involving its employees, the Agency files a memorandum which argues the need for secrecy as a reason for not disclosing the employee's identity. To date, federal district courts have agreed. OGC was concerned that the aggrieved party could argue that, because under the revision the Federal Government still would not assume liability for torts committed overseas, Congress intended that the individual be liable for overseas torts, else it would have provided that the Federal Government be liable. The result, feared by OGC, could be that the Agency's Secrecy Agreement would be rebutted by this argument of implied Congressional intent.

STAT
3. [] On 25 January 1978, I discussed this with Irving Jaffe, Deputy Assistant Attorney General, Civil Division. He said that the Department of Justice was going to amend the proposed legislation to include constitutional torts committed overseas within the scope of the Act. This is the type category of torts for which the suits involving the Agency have brought. He added that, if a situation arose which still presented problems of disclosure of an employee's identity, the Government could possibly assume liability and require the plaintiff merely to prove damages.

4. [] who handles the litigation in this area stated later that day that this amendment would solve his problem.

Attached for your information is a copy of the SSCI's latest draft Title II, which we received yesterday evening. The SSCI staffers still indicate the charter legislation will be introduced late this week. In an effort to provide whatever views to the SSCI we can develop in so short a time, operational components have been provided copies for review and comments.

Here are 12 copies of the latest SSCI draft of Title II which we received late yesterday. My information is that the plan still is to introduce the charter legislation by the end of this week. I have disseminated copies throughout the Agency for quick review and comment.

We received the SSCI's latest draft Title II late yesterday; I've distributed it throughout the Agency for review and whatever comment can be developed within one day. The Committee staff is still operating under the assumption that the charter bill will be introduced by the end of the week. I'll let you know immediately if I hear otherwise; let me know if you pick up any such intelligence.

We received a copy of the SSCI's latest draft Title II yesterday evening. The Committee staffers still indicate the legislation will be introduced by the end of this week, which means any changes that will be made will have to be made early tomorrow. If possible, could your office review this draft today and let me have any comments. Given the almost unrealistic time restraints, and realizing we cannot provide studied and fully considered views within this time frame, we would like to provide the SSCI with whatever material we can. I'll let you know immediately if the timetable for introduction changes.

Once again, thank you.
